Competitiveness Challenges of The New Europe

Professor Lidija Polutnik

“Competitiveness Challenges of the New Europe” course explores competitive and strategic dimensions of companies in the context of the EU, its institutions, its history and culture and its present reality. This course builds on the core economics and global strategy courses by taking a deeper look at strategy of companies doing business in the EC. It also examines emerging trends, opportunities and challenges for business and business creation in Italy and in the EC in light of its comparative advantage, and current economic and political pressures and events.

We will visit several Italian companies to study the context of doing business in the EC. We will be based in Milan, the main financial and business center of Italy where our partner school is Bocconi University, ranked as one of the top business schools in Europe.

Last but not least, Italian business is well known for luxury products and this course will explore sources of competitive advantage for luxury brands, and sustainability challenges to luxury brands as a result of increased competitiveness in the global markets.

Russia in Transition

Professor Bill Coyle

Russia In Transition

Professor Bill Coyle

Students will learn about Russia- never a boring place!

Before we travel, you will learn about its politics, society and culture as a prelude to learning about its business environment.

In St. Petersburg you will visit and work with faculty and students at St. Petersburg State University and the Graduate School of Management (GSOM), the best business school in Russia! You will have lectures at GSOM, work with their students, visit a variety of companies and round out your experience in Russia with a number of culturally relevant activities.

Presentations will wrap up the week's visit with GSOM.
